THIS IS UNEVALUATED INFORMATION

Fritz Selbmann, Minister for Heavy Industry, allegedly ordered on 9 May 1955 the immediate stoppage of the delivery of potash fertilizer to East German consumers. The people were informed that this stoppage was ordered because the sowing cultivation of the fields had been accomplished. The order, however, was allegedly given because East Germany could no longer honor its export agreements. Moreover, another order has prohibited the inspection of all potash mine shafts, allegedly because of security reasons. An insight into the potash production centers shows that there are about 8000 shafts.
